

eSign Options

Good afternoon:

I am looking for a low cost (maybe free) option for digital signatures on documents. I do not need it often, so hard to justify much for a monthly subscription. Some have free options for a low number of documents, but that may not be enough when I need it.

Does anyone use PandaDoc?

---

Mine is low cost. I sign with the pencil tool. That is actually my signature!

Jim Winiarski

---

I've used HelloSign for the last 18 months or so and have been satisfied with them. I've had clients in the tech industry tell me that the fundamental technology behind e-signatures is the same so DocuSign, HelloSign, and the others are all basically the same thing with different user-interfaces on them.

I have HelloSign on an annual plan ($156 for the year for the Pro version), but I use it all the time since California state courts have nearly gone to e-filing. HelloSign does have a free plan, which looks like it is limited to 3 signatures per month. Maybe that'd be worth it if you only occasionally use it?

In the time that I've been using HelloSign, they were acquired by Dropbox.

I use Dropbox also, but have not tested out the HelloSign-Dropbox integration.

Andy I Chen, California

---

Look at sign request for a free option as well. 10 docs per month

<https://signrequest.com/en/plans>

Dan Nguyen, California

---

I agree with everything Andy said. My secretary loves it.

Anthony S. Alpert, California

---

I just started Mycase, for $50-60 a month, it includes e-signatures, payment collection(debit, credit ach), case manager, lead manager, document creation, integrates with my Outlook 365 and permanently keeps copies of emails I associate with cases.

Nicholas I. Fuerst, Arizona

---

Curious to know a couple of things. How long have they been in business?

How long have they been offering this "permanent" service? What does the EULA look like? Does it have the usual "no warranty of merchantability or fitness for any particular purpose" so common in on line services? Or do they actually accept some responsibility and attendant liability should they fail to deliver on their promises? Are the servers in a specific location with ascertainable jurisdiction, or are they "cloud"servers which could be most anywhere at any particular time?

I've just learned we have a 400 year old bible in my church archives.

The church itself is only about 100 years old, so it must have been an acquisition/donation. Still, it stands as a sort of reference for this notion of "permanent."

Robert Thomas Hayes Link, California

---

I've been very happy with SignNow,
https://snseats.signnow.com/purchase/business\_plans/pricing.

Lisa Solomon, New York

---

I use Adobe Acrobat Pro, because it has so many other features that I use daily. It has e-sign capabilities built in.

Brian H. Cole, California